Media coverage is always influenced by the ideology, power and interests of media owners. News made by journalists, of course, has news value related to human interest, one of which is about suicide. This study aims to determine how a media frame and construct the reality of news about the Suicide Case on tribunnews.com and tempo.co. The framing used in this research is the Robert N. Entman framing which focuses on how to define a problem, what / who causes the problem, what moral decisions are contained in the news and what solutions are offered by journalists. The results of this study indicate that in constructing and framing Suicide Cases, both tribunnews.com and tempo.co have slight differences. Where tribunnews.com is mostly not in accordance with the journalistic code of ethics because it should not clearly state identity and disguise the tools or media used in suicide. Meanwhile, tempo.co still stated the identity by initials or disguised. The main conclusion in this research is that the two news sites, namely tribunnews.com and tempo.co, do framing the news.
