The Effect Of Trust On Intimacy In Early Dating Adults Who Experience And Do Not Experience Parental Divorce

Iswynanda Noor Justitia,1 Gita Widya Laksmini Soerjoatmodjo1, Supriyanto2

1) Student of Psychology Department, Pembangunan Jaya University
2) Lecturer of Psychology Department, Pembangunan Jaya University

This study aims to determine the effect of trust on intimacy in early dating adults who experience and do not experience parental divorce. Trust is a belief, caring for a partner and the strength of a relationship. If there is no trust, it is difficult to build intimacy in a relationship. Intimacy is an experience marked by the closeness, warmth and communication that may be involving or without involving sexual contact. This study uses quantitative methods with a sample of 358 respondents aged 20-35 years. The sampling technique used was purposive sampling. In this study, to measure trust, researcher used Trust in Close Relationship as a measurement instrument, while to measure intimacy, researcher used Personal Assessment of Intimacy in Relationship as a measurement instrument. The analysis technique uses simple regression test with JASP 0.9.1.0 software. The result of this study indicates that trust has a significant positive influence on intimacy in early adults who are dating, both who experienced and did not experience parental divorce.

Key Words: Trust, Intimacy, early adulthood

Libraries: 37
Publication Years: 1985 - 2019