This study discusses the issue of sanitation in Jakarta, which is one of the problems related to the issue of livability in Jakarta. The issue of livability that often arises after the publication of the guidebook for moving the capital city is one of the reasons for this research. This study aims to look at the framing of the issue of sanitation and livability in Jakarta in the online news media Kompas.com and Cnnindoensia.com in the period January 2022 to March 2022. This research is qualitative with a constructivist paradigm and uses the Zhongdang Pan and Kosicki model framing method. This shows that Kompas' reporting focus is different from CNN's. Kompas tends to side with the community in its reporting, while CNN discusses how the government deals with a sanitation problem in Jakarta. The media that discusses sanitation issues more critically is Kompas.com, this media discusses how a sanitation issue can occur to how the problem of sanitation issues can be overcome. There are differences in ownership of different media, there are differences in press values, Kompas with social responsibility that voices the voice of the community and CNN adopts a liberal press system that supervises the performance of the government.
