The Supreme Court of the Republic of Indonesia is one of the high state institutions that hold judicial power which has the duties and authorities clearly regulated in the Act or the Supreme Court Law. The Supreme Court, which oversees 910 work units with a very wide span of control, becomes a separate obstacle in carrying out its duties, so that the Supreme Court leadership establishes policies on the application of information technology in business processes, both in the technical field of judicial and judicial administration. A business process is a set of activities to realize business goals starting from input, then adding value to get output in the form of results that consumers want, with clear definitions of the beginning of the process, the end of the process, inputs and outputs. The Clerk and Secretariat of the Supreme Court and the judicial bodies under it are required to use information technology, including electronic-based judicial services. Information and communication technology within the Supreme Court and the Judicial Body under it, generally adjusts the work process at the Supreme Court with a good business process to encourage the achievement of an effective, efficient and economical organization.
